ISSUE 6, NOVEMBER 2021

Wrap-up!

For over three years, we at ViRAL have produced a plentiful of material that is now available to you. You can now access our manual, curriculum and quests, AR and 360° productions, essays and case studies. Upon their creation, we thought of heritage professionals, teachers, young people and adults who are excited about new digital technology as much as we are. We truly hope we have met your expectations.

Although this is a wrap-up, it is far from a goodbye. We would like you to explore all these resources at your own pace, share it with others and learn from them. Feel free to reach out to and provide us with valuable feedback. It would be delightful to hear from you.

That being said, the team wishes you happy holidays and a wonderful new year, full of new exciting discoveries and opportunities for learning.

See you soon!

A first-person testimony...

ViRAL turned out to be an excellent opportunity to reflect on notions that concern how we communicate cultural heritage. Though the project prioritises (post-)industrial heritage and non-formal education approaches to learning, I could see how malleable the operating concepts were, as well as their application to other heritage and educational contexts.

As a teacher of themes related to cultural heritage, I was able to extend my understanding towards new horizons and to value even more the role of digital technologies in processes of cultural mediation. The reflection that the project ViRAL allowed me to perform is a precious contribute since I feel more capable of teaching my students and inform them in a fresher and more meaningful way.
